Out[29]:

'The Gift of the Magi\nby O. Henry\n\nOne dollar and eighty-seven cents. Tha t was all. And sixty cents of it was in pennies. Pennies saved one and two a t a time by bulldozing the grocer and the vegetable man and the butcher unti 1 one\'s cheeks burned with the silent imputation of parsimony that such clo se dealing implied. Three times Della counted it. One dollar and eighty-seve n cents. And the next day would be Christmas.\n\nThere was clearly nothing 1 eft to do but flop down on the shabby little couch and howl. So Della did i t. Which instigates the moral reflection that life is made up of sobs, sniff les, and smiles, with sniffles predominating.\n\nWhile the mistress of the h ome is gradually subsiding from the first stage to the second, take a look a t the home. A furnished flat at $8 per week. It did not exactly beggar descr iption, but it certainly had that word on the look-out for the mendicancy sq uad.\n\nIn the vestibule below was a letter-box into which no letter would g o, and an electric button from which no mortal finger could coax a ring. Als o appertaining thereunto was a card bearing the name "Mr. James Dillingham Y oung."\n\nThe "Dillingham" had been flung to the breeze during a former peri od of prosperity when its possessor was being paid $30 per week. Now, when t he income was shrunk to $20, the letters of "Dillingham" looked blurred, as though they were thinking seriously of contracting to a modest and unassumin g D. But whenever Mr. James Dillingham Young came home and reached his flat above he was called "Jim" and greatly hugged by Mrs. James Dillingham Young, already introduced to you as Della. Which is all very good.\n\nDella finishe d her cry and attended to her cheeks with the powder rag. She stood by the w indow and looked out dully at a grey cat walking a grey fence in a grey back yard. To-morrow would be Christmas Day, and she had only $1.87 with which to buy Jim a present. She had been saving every penny she could for months, wit h this result. Twenty dollars a week doesn\'t go far. Expenses had been grea ter than she had calculated. They always are. Only $1.87 to buy a present fo r Jim. Her Jim. Many a happy hour she had spent planning for something nice for him. Something fine and rare and sterling--something just a little bit n ear to being worthy of the honour of being owned by Jim.\n\nThere was a pier -glass between the windows of the room. Perhaps you have seen a pier-glass i n an $8 flat. A very thin and very agile person may, by observing his reflec tion in a rapid sequence of longitudinal strips, obtain a fairly accurate co nception of his looks. Della, being slender, had mastered the art.\n\nSudden ly she whirled from the window and stood before the glass. Her eyes were shi ning brilliantly, but her face had lost its colour within twenty seconds. Ra pidly she pulled down her hair and let it fall to its full length.\n\nNow, t here were two possessions of the James Dillingham Youngs in which they both took a mighty pride. One was Jim\'s gold watch that had been his father\'s a nd his grandfather\'s. The other was Della\'s hair. Had the Queen of Sheba l ived in the flat across the airshaft, Della would have let her hair hang out of the window some day to dry just to depreciate Her Majesty\'s jewels and g ifts. Had King Solomon been the janitor, with all his treasures piled up in the basement, Jim would have pulled out his watch every time he passed, just to see him pluck at his beard from envy.\n\nSo now Della\'s beautiful hair f ell about her, rippling and shining like a cascade of brown waters. It reach ed below her knee and made itself almost a garment for her. And then she did it up again nervously and quickly. Once she faltered for a minute and stood still while a tear or two splashed on the worn red carpet.\n\nOn went her ol d brown jacket; on went her old brown hat. With a whirl of skirts and with t he brilliant sparkle still in her eyes, she cluttered out of the door and do wn the stairs to the street.\n\nWhere she stopped the sign read: "Mme Sofron ie. Hair Goods of All Kinds." One Eight up Della ran, and collected herself, panting. Madame, large, too white, chilly, hardly looked the "Sofronie."\n

\n"Will you buy my hair?" asked Della.\n\n"I buy hair," said Madame. "Take y er hat off and let\'s have a sight at the looks of it."\n\nDown rippled the brown cascade.\n\n"Twenty dollars," said Madame, lifting the mass with a pra ctised hand.\n\n"Give it to me quick" said Della.\n\nOh, and the next two ho urs tripped by on rosy wings. Forget the hashed metaphor. She was ransacking the stores for Jim\'s present.\n\nShe found it at last. It surely had been m ade for Jim and no one else. There was no other like it in any of the store s, and she had turned all of them inside out. It was a platinum fob chain si mple and chaste in design, properly proclaiming its value by substance alone and not by meretricious ornamentation--as all good things should do. It was even worthy of The Watch. As soon as she saw it she knew that it must be Jim \'s. It was like him. Quietness and value--the description applied to both. Twenty-one dollars they took from her for it, and she hurried home with the 78 cents. With that chain on his watch Jim might be properly anxious about t he time in any company. Grand as the watch was, he sometimes looked at it on the sly on account of the old leather strap that he used in place of a chai n.\n\nWhen Della reached home her intoxication gave way a little to prudence and reason. She got out her curling irons and lighted the gas and went to wo rk repairing the ravages made by generosity added to love. Which is always a tremendous task dear friends--a mammoth task.\n\nWithin forty minutes her he ad was covered with tiny, close-lying curls that made her look wonderfully 1 ike a truant schoolboy. She looked at her reflection in the mirror long, car efully, and critically.\n\n"If Jim doesn\'t kill me," she said to herself, "before he takes a second look at me, he\'ll say I look like a Coney Island chorus girl. But what could I do--oh! what could I do with a dollar and eigh ty-seven cents?"\n\nAt 7 o\'clock the coffee was made and the frying-pan was on the back of the stove hot and ready to cook the chops.\n\nJim was never 1 ate. Della doubled the fob chain in her hand and sat on the corner of the ta ble near the door that he always entered. Then she heard his step on the sta ir away down on the first flight, and she turned white for just a moment. Sh e had a habit of saying little silent prayers about the simplest everyday th ings, and now she whispered: "Please, God, make him think I am still prett y."\n\nThe door opened and Jim stepped in and closed it. He looked thin and very serious. Poor fellow, he was only twenty-two--and to be burdened with a family! He needed a new overcoat and he was without gloves.\n\nJim stepped i nside the door, as immovable as a setter at the scent of quail. His eyes wer e fixed upon Della, and there was an expression in them that she could not r ead, and it terrified her. It was not anger, nor surprise, nor disapproval, nor horror, nor any of the sentiments that she had been prepared for. He sim ply stared at her fixedly with that peculiar expression on his face.\n\nDell a wriggled off the table and went for him.\n\n"Jim, darling," she cried, "do n\'t look at me that way. I had my hair cut off and sold it because I couldn \'t have lived through Christmas without giving you a present. It\'ll grow o ut again--you won\'t mind, will you? I just had to do it. My hair grows awfu lly fast. Say \'Merry Christmas!\' Jim, and let\'s be happy. You don\'t know what a nice-what a beautiful, nice gift I\'ve got for you."\n\n"You\'ve cut off your hair?" asked Jim, laboriously, as if he had not arrived at that pat ent fact yet, even after the hardest mental labour.\n\n"Cut it off and sold it," said Della. "Don\'t you like me just as well, anyhow? I\'m me without m y hair, ain\'t I?"\n\nJim looked about the room curiously.\n\n"You say your hair is gone?" he said, with an air almost of idiocy.\n\n"You needn\'t look for it," said Della. "It\'s sold, I tell you--sold and gone, too. It\'s Chri stmas Eve, boy. Be good to me, for it went for you. Maybe the hairs of my he ad were numbered," she went on with a sudden serious sweetness, "but nobody could ever count my love for you. Shall I put the chops on, Jim?"\n\nOut of his trance Jim seemed quickly to wake. He enfolded his Della. For ten second s let us regard with discreet scrutiny some inconsequential object in the ot her direction. Eight dollars a week or a million a year--what is the differe nce? A mathematician or a wit would give you the wrong answer. The magi brou ght valuable gifts, but that was not among them. This dark assertion will be illuminated later on.\n\nJim drew a package from his overcoat pocket and thr ew it upon the table.\n\n"Don\'t make any mistake, Dell," he said, "about m e. I don\'t think there\'s anything in the way of a haircut or a shave or a shampoo that could make me like my girl any less. But if you\'ll unwrap that package you may see why you had me going a while at first."\n\nWhite fingers and nimble tore at the string and paper. And then an ecstatic scream of joy; and then, alas! a quick feminine change to hysterical tears and wails, neces sitating the immediate employment of all the comforting powers of the lord o f the flat.\n\nFor there lay The Combs--the set of combs, side and back, tha t Della had worshipped for long in a Broadway window. Beautiful combs, pure tortoise-shell, with jewelled rims--just the shade to wear in the beautiful vanished hair. They were expensive combs, she knew, and her heart had simply craved and yearned over them without the least hope of possession. And now, they were hers, but the tresses that should have adorned the coveted adornme nts were gone.\n\nBut she hugged them to her bosom, and at length she was ab le to look up with dim eyes and a smile and say: "My hair grows so fast, Ji m!"\n\nAnd then Della leaped up like a little singed cat and cried, "Oh, o h!"\n\nJim had not yet seen his beautiful present. She held it out to him ea gerly upon her open palm. The dull precious metal seemed to flash with a ref lection of her bright and ardent spirit.\n\n"Isn\'t it a dandy, Jim? I hunte d all over town to find it. You\'ll have to look at the time a hundred times a day now. Give me your watch. I want to see how it looks on it."\n\nInstead of obeying, Jim tumbled down on the couch and put his hands under the back o f his head and smiled.\n\n"Dell," said he, "let\'s put our Christmas present s away and keep \'em a while. They\'re too nice to use just at present. I so ld the watch to get the money to buy Your combs. And now suppose you put the chops on. "\n\nThe magi, as you know, were wise men--wonderfully wise men-who brought gifts to the Babe in the manger. They invented the art of giving Chr istmas presents. Being wise, their gifts were no doubt wise ones, possibly b earing the privilege of exchange in case of duplication. And here I have lam ely related to you the uneventful chronicle of two foolish children in a fla t who most unwisely sacrificed for each other the greatest treasures of thei r house. But in a last word to the wise of these days let it be said that of all who give gifts these two were the wisest. Of all who give and receive gi fts, such as they are wisest. Everywhere they are wisest. They are the mag $i.\n'$

VOLUME I

CHAPTER I

Emma Woodhouse, handsome, clever, and rich, with a comfortable home and happy disposition, seemed to unite some of the best blessings of existence; and had lived nearly twenty-one years in the world with very little to distress or vex her.

She was the youngest of the two daughters of a most affectionate, indulgent father; and had, in consequence of her sister's marriage, been mistress of his house from a very early period. Her mother had died too long ago for her to have more than an indistinct remembrance of her caresses; and her place had been supplied by an excellent woman as governess, who had fallen little short of a mother in affection.
